

EPHRAIM KIRBY, 1757-1804
FIRST SUPERIOR COURT JUDGE OF THE MISSISSIPPI TERRITORY

Ephraim Kirby was born in Connecticut, the great-great grandson of Joseph Kirby, who emigrated from Warwickshire to Hartford in the early Seventeenth Century. Ephraim Kirby was educated at Yale, but left without a degree. He served in the cavalry during the Revolution and was wounded thirteen times. In 1787, Yale gave Kirby an honorary Master of Arts degree. He practiced law in Litchfield and was in the Connecticut Legislature from 1791 until 1801, afterwards serving as a director of the Western Reserve in Ohio. In 1789 Kirby compiled the first volume of law reports in America, those of the Superior Court of Connecticut.

President Jefferson appointed Kirby as the first Superior Court Judge of the Mississippi Territory in 1804. He went directly to his new post, Fort Stoddert, on the Alabama River north of Spanish-held Mobile, and near the present Mount Vernon. In this sparsely-settled wilderness, he began the foundation of a new court system for what would become the State of Alabama.

Kirby lived only a few months, dying of fever while planning to return to his family. He left a wife and eight children in Connecticut. His grave at old Fort Stoddert has never been found.

(Copy of "Portrait of Epharim Kirby," by Charles Armour, late 18th century.)